Indian Act X of 1872 was adopted with certain modifications. Those parts of that Act which related to trials by jury were expressly omitted, but in other respects was adopted, statute Mistakes, &c. to such the Second Consolidation of Regulation III of 1856 &c. &c. &c. &c.
Whereas the Courts of this Settlement do follow the Practice laid down in the Criminal Law Procedure Act, and whereas they deem it to do so, was not desirable under all the circumstances which it is necessary to consider by legislation. Whereas, Act X of 1872 has been repealed and superseded in British India by Act X of 1882, and generally important provisions have been introduced into the latter which did not exist in the former, and whereas the Courts of this Country should be guided by these provisions. The Bill which I am to have it has accordingly been drawn up on the basis of Act X of 1882, but some important deviations have been made with it as compared with that Act, and these will be explained at the proper time, if the Council grant the application I am going to make. I beg for leave to introduce a Bill for the amendment of the present Law relating to the Procedure of the Criminal Courts of the country."

Leave was granted.

Mr. P. Rama Pillay then moved for leave to bring in a Bill to regulate the relations between Jenmis and their tenants.

He said "The enactments in the LIBRARY ARCHIVES Kerala Legislative Assembly